Letter from the Editor

There are many who feel that Thanksgiving should not be celebrated because it was the beginning of the genocide of America's indigenous peoples. It is time to think about the reason for the holiday.

The name of it tells it all. It is not about the pilgrims or the Indians but about gratitude. Over the years, many of the colonies held Thanksgiving celebrations. Unlike today, it was not a day set aside to stuff yourself but a day of fasting and giving thanks.

President Abraham Lincoln, while trying to unite the nation after the Civil War, declared that the last Thursday in November 1863 be set aside as a national day of thanksgiving.

Many years have passed since Lincoln issued his Thanksgiving Proclamation. As a nation and a world we have faced many calamities in the past year, extreme weather, civil unrest, and terrorism. As Thanksgiving approaches it is time to ask, what is Thanksgiving? Is it just a day to watch football and stuff yourself silly?

Lets look at the definition of Thanksgiving according to dictionary.com: Thanksgiving is a noun and is

1. the act of giving thanks; grateful acknowledgment of benefits or favors, especially to God.
2. an expression of thanks, especially to God.

While there are many who do not believe in a God there are many ways and things we can be grateful for, I personally and grateful for many things and especially that I can still walk. What are you thankful for? I challenge you to make a list and see what you have.

Students gain life saving certification with SLCC EMT program

Harrison Keeran

Contributing Writer

Salt Lake Community College is helping prepare students for entry into the medical field with its Emergency Medical Technician (EMT) course.

The course runs 13 weeks at which the end of there is a written exam given to students who wish to become a certified EMT.

Upon gaining EMT certifications students will be able to apply for a variety of jobs in the medical field.

"Most definitely, the program coordinator, Russ Malone, is the man -- (he) is full of knowledge and knows what he's talking about," says Stockton Trujillo, a student participating in the program.

An EMT by definition is a trained medical professional who provides initial medical care to a sick or injured patient and determine what additional care will be needed. Being an EMT can be a stressful job.

An EMT helps people who could be in very poor health conditions and knows the moves made could determine the outcome of the situation.

The medical field is a booming profession. An EMT license will ease the process of finding a job after finishing school. The average pay rate of an EMT is $14.91 per hour, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics

Extinguish a bad habit at the Great American Smoke Out

Kristin Hargrove

Contributing Writer

Mark Twain once said, "Quitting smoking is easy. I've done it a thousand times." According to the American Cancer Society, nicotine, a substance naturally found in tobacco, is considered as addictive as heroin or cocaine. There are 42 million smokers in America, and a 2012 study conducted by the Center for Disease Control and Prevention concluded that there are more cigarette smokers in younger age ranges than any other range.

The Student Health Advising Committee, also known as SHAC, is a club at the Salt Lake Community College comprised of students who promote healthy lifestyles and education to other students on campus. "We want them to make their health a priority," implored the club president, Mercedes Maestas.

Startling facts listed on cancer.org reveal that 480,000 people in this country die from illnesses related to tobacco use each year, in other words, more Americans than alcohol, car accidents, suicide, AIDS, homicide, and illegal drug overdoses combined. The American Cancer Society website recounts a quote from the U.S. Surgeon General, "Smoking cessation [quitting smoking] represents the single most important step that smokers can take to enhance the length and quality of their lives."

On November 19th, SHAC and the American Cancer Society are joining forces for the Great American Smoke Out. The ACS has designated the third Thursday of November to be a national event to promote the cessation of tobacco use and resources to quit. They invite people to quit smoking, even if it is for that day only. If a person can quit for one day, it could lead to multiple days of quitting, which may in time break the habit. The American Cancer Society has chosen the theme of the event to be "Quit like a champion," because quitting is a race for good health that starts today. "Today is the day that quitters win!" states the official campaign page.

The event is not limited to smokers only. "Yes! The more the merrier!" an enthusiastic Maestas replied when asked if non-smokers were welcome. "We want everyone to come, hang out, and learn all of these really helpful tips and tricks to staying tobacco free or quitting like a champion."

The Great American Smoke Out provides information to anyone who wants to learn more about the harmful effects of cigarettes or secondhand smoke. Educating yourself on these may convince you to quit or never start at all. The Student Health Advising Committee will cover a range of topics, including the effects of smoking, the economic burden of cigarettes, and suggestions to quit.

Interactive activities for students will create a different perspective on smoking. As an advocate and president of SHAC, Maestas also says that tobacco use can affect a student's performance, mental health, and physical health.

The event is the tip of the iceberg of resources that are available on SLCC's Center for Health and Counseling website. Students and faculty members can participate in a tobacco cessation wellness program. The eight week program is $40, and facilitators meet with participants in a group setting. SLCC's Center for Health and Counseling website also lists multiple contacts for substance abuse, counseling, and community resources.

The Great American Smoke Out will be held in the student event center on the Taylorsville campus from 11a.m. to 1p.m. with complimentary refreshments.

Una Mano Amiga

It was an amazing feast for the eyes and mind at the Discover Your Opportunities Una Mano Amiga 2015 Conference, held Friday at the SLCC Taylorsville-Redwood Campus Oak Room.

Sponsored by SLCC's Peer Mentoring Program and student leadership board, Una Mano Amiga (UMA), which is Spanish for "a friendly hand", provides ongoing academic peer mentoring and support to help Hispanic students and future students to follow their educational dreams.

Following welcome remarks from UMA academic advisors, Luz Gamarra and Elizette Bond Multicultural Hispanic/Latino(a) Advisors, Dr. Roderic Land, Special Assistant to President Huftalin, set a high note by encouraging attendees to continue in their pursuit of academic excellence.

Gamarra spoke on "The American Dream is in Your Hands," then Dr. Sonia Parker, SLCC Director of Academic Career Advising, brought the message home to the audience with "You Can Do It!"

Joel Romero, UMA student board president, served as master of ceremonies to engage the audience and moderate a high-level panel of informative community experts. UMA's student board, peer mentors and event organizers, all mingled with attendees and ensured that any questions were answered.

"There are about two hundred people here. This was a very well planned out event," says Gordon Storrs, Academic Advisor at South City Campus.

Evening entertainment included a spectacular array of cultural dances and musical performances, a traditional dinner of carnitas, prizes, networking, and take-home scholarship and resource materials. For more UMA information email Geraldine Palma at geraldw2003@yahoo.com or Zolla Martinez 1-801-577-2241.

A variety of multicultural activities were held during the 2015 Una Mano Amiga Conference.

SLCC staff display their artistic skills at 2015 Faculty Art Show

Ashley Baker

Contributing Writer

Salt Lake Community College's Visual Art and Design department is set to host a 'Faculty Art Show,' where adjunct and full time faculty's various types of artwork will be on display and for sale.

"Our hope is to showcase the diversity of talent that we have in our department," says Whitney King Hyans, SLCC photography professor.

King Hyans is responsible for bringing the faculty art show back from its 15 year hiatus. King Hyans said she "planted the seed" for the return of the show and others got on board with it.

"Since we moved to this building [South City Campus], it's been a huge transition," says King Hyans.

The art show was previously held in the Markosian Library at the Redwood campus, which didn't provide the necessary room for the setup of artwork, causing a temporary halt in the display. This year, the show will be held at the South City Campus in the George S. & Dolores Dore Eccles Art Gallery.

The artwork submitted by faculty consists of illustration, animation, fine art painting, graphic design, website design, and photography.

King Hyans, says, "we have a good representation [of artwork]," for each program in the Visual Arts and Design department.

Professor Adamson receives award for his painting.

through January 29.

For more information about purchasing artwork or questions regarding the art show contact Whitney King Hyans at whitney.king@slcc.edu.

Though not largely publicized, the pieces are for sale upon request. If you are interested in procuring artwork, there will be a bar code on each piece of art that can be scanned by a cell phone scanner app which will give the purchase information and price or contact King Hyans directly.

"Our faculty are super talented and we wanted people to see it," says King Hyans.

King Hyans intends to continue the tradition of the faculty art show, which will likely be a biannual event. Her hope is that with more frequency, more people will be inclined to participate.

Opening ceremony is Thursday November 19 from 6-8 pm, in the George S. & Dolores Dore Eccles Art Gallery at the South City Campus. Light refreshments will be served at the opening.

The show is free and open to students, staff, faculty and the community. Faculty artwork will be on display over the course of winter break

Producer & equipment designer talks music business at SLCC

Marc Hanson

Staff Writer

Cliff Mäag has spent more than 35 years in the music industry, recording and engineering albums from a vast array of artists from all genres. After many years behind a mixing console, Mäag transitioned into designing high-end studio EQs and compressors. His intuition and finely tuned ears have made him an authority on the subject of sound.

Salt Lake Community College had the honor of bringing Mäag in for a special clinic and demonstration of his EQ and compression units to students in the South City Campus.

"What we ended up doing was look over some of our student's mixes and recordings. We talked about equalization and compression. He demonstrated some of his new compressors and EQs and we applied them across some different instruments to show what can be achieved by them," says Stephen Sue, head of the Music Recording Technology Program at SLCC.

Mäag's engineering can be heard on everything from Marie Osmond to Cheap Trick and beyond. His small line of analog outboard gear anchored in a sea of digital has gained a loyal niche following. Some of the most in-demand recording engineers proudly endorse his product.

"A lot of equipment designers design equipment around very generic specifications," says Sue. "Cliff tends to look a little more on how people actually hear. In a way, it's kind of tuned to our sensitivities and our ear, as a result it seems to produce a much more pleasing, transparent sound."

Mäag addressed the finer points of sound design. Mäag also went into detail on his history of engineering. During his tenure as an engineer he reached a point where in order to achieve the results he wanted, he needed to design some outboard gear of his own.

The small group of students in attendance were exposed to certain applications and techniques for using Mäag Audio devices, and fine tuning their ears by knowing what to listen for in a mix.

The visit gave Mäag an opportunity to get acquainted for the first time with SLCC's facilities at the Center for Arts and Media.

"It's a great place you guys got. You're lucky to have it," says Mäag. "It's great to have a booth big enough to fit all of us here."

Radio SLCC gives students a voice as well as marketable skills

Jorge Lavayen

Contributing Writer

Some of you have might noticed the new Radio SLCC site RadioSLCC.com. It's simply a whole new approach to College Student Radio. On the other hand some of you didn't even know that SLCC has a very solid Radio School Program and that it features SLCC students having their own show and playing their own music.

"We are just trying to provide a tool for the students to use so they understand what is going on Campus," said Zac Hodge whom for the last 3 years has been the Radio SLCC Station Manager. "RadioSLCC.com website has been redesigned to be mobile responsive" which means that if anyone uses their mobile device to go to the site it automatically will recognize it and let them chose the "Listen Live" option. All this is in preparation to a newly developed app the station is just about to launch, in an effort to meet the student demands that didn't find the old website mobile user friendly.

RadioSLCC.com's new approach begins with SLCC students that take the radio production class and immediately gets students on the air in our own Top 40 radio station. They will also learn to do all sorts of jobs, including: studio and equipment maintenance, live remote broadcasts for campus and community events, record programming for station archives, mentor other radio students and more.

If you enroll in COMM 1560 – Radio Production – it will give you 3 credit hours plus it is an accepted interdisciplinary credit, which counts towards your gen-ed requirement, it's a cool way to earn 3 credits on a semester while having your friends and family listening to you being a show radio host for one hour a week by jumping on RadioSLCC.com anywhere they are.

On the other hand, if radio is your passion, Radio SLCC has a new state of the art radio studio facility located at SLCC South City Campus where you will learn all the skills and cutting edge technologies that radio stations use on today's radio world, in fact many of our students already have internships on local radio stations such as KSL Radio and others.

Last but not least, radio students can work at Radio SLCC and earn some cash while going to college. Students will need to complete COMM 1560 or an equivalent class before applying. Look for current openings on the Mass COMM website slcc.edu/mcc/jobs.
